PART 2:

FINAL EVALUATOR'S comments on revised paper (if any)	Authors' response to final evaluator's comments
The manuscript presents still many problems: The main drawback is: The writing in English is very poor. The description of the bacteriological method has many English mistakes. Some sentences are impossible to understand. Without a thorough revision it cannot be published. I tried to make corrections, but it's impossible. And if a reviewer cannot understand the text, the evaluation is also impossible. The discussion is the worst part in this regard. I'm not a native English speaker, therefore I know that in this case a proof-reading is mandatory. The author didn't make some corrections asked in the first submission. For instance the term antibiotic, sensitivity and antibioresistance are not used. They referred antibiotic effectiveness, when the antimicrobial resistance test doesn't measure this. They don't inform who performed the serotyping, In general, the study is limited (number of samples, number of isolates tested) and the authors didn't take this into account. They make many general conclusions that are not possible with a limited amount of results. This aspect must be discussed: the limitations of the study.	The author "A" performed the stereotyping, and I wrote in the author's contribution section. I asked to colleagues to correct the English, I hope that its better now. We don't wanted to make conclusion because in Cote d'Ivoire , it's the first study on the subject and we would like to considered our results like preliminary one . Line 292 to 302 of the latest version have been removed Line 276 to 278 of the present version have been added Figure 1 have been translated We have made a very big revision to correct the English in all of the manuscript. Sorry for the poor English, we'll take account your advices for the next article
