

Your observation concerning the slight modification of the title is correct.

We believe that this slight modification in the title is necessary and apt. It properly captions the report.

‘ Omphalitis in a Nigerian neonate; resurgence of a dying disease’ which was the first caption is inappropriate, because the report of a single case of an uncommon disease, which is not in extinction or eradicated is technically speaking not a resurgence!

On the other hand, the currently suggested title which is ‘Omphalitis in a Nigerian neonate; lessons to learn’ appropriately captions this report which highlights why this neonate came down with this uncommon disease and steps to prevent re-occurrences in similar situations or circumstances in the future.

We hope that our explanation convinces and is acceptable to the editor, but if not please go ahead with the publication with the previously stated title.

The corrections have been effected.

The manuscript is a case study.

The title has also been modified to reflect the true nature of the report.

The report of a single case cannot be resurgence.

Thus the title has been modified to 'Omphalitis in a Nigerian neonate; lessons to learn'.
