| I had carefully read and reviewed the authors' final revised manuscript. I also think that this manuscript is very interesting and analytical, but it is just a report that the patient had complained his symptoms systemically. Also as I said earlier, this manuscript could not be written in a professional ophthalmological term. So I still think that the manuscript cannot meet the academic and scholastic requisite for improving ophthalmological scholarship. I think that the authors' work seems to be more appropriate for another field journal. However, I also appropriate the authors' effort for revising their work. Thank you for the authors' effort. | One of our ophthalmologists and his associate read this paper, made extensive comments and then we discussed it for three hours. They were defensive of their profession and they helped us to soften the tone of the manuscript toward ophthalmologists. They also helped us to cast it in “professional ophthalmological term”s. Then we rewrote the manuscript. There is now a lot of material that will improve ophthalmological scholarship. We have highlighted in yellow only the most significant of these parts. This material is not in the ophthalmological literature. We are confident that most ophthalmologists do not know this material and it would therefore improve their ophthalmological scholarship if they read this paper. |
